The New National Bank

Citizens Subscribed $62,500

A meeting of the subscribers to stock in the new bank was held on Wednesday evening and a tentative organization perfected in the form of a corporation. A special committee was appointed to make the final investigation. A committee, appointed by the chair was directed to bring in a list of eligible subscribers to be voted upon for directors and the following were elected:

Lawrence M. Carroll, Norway
Walter P. Cullinan, Norway
Dorothy E. Cullinan, Norway
F. W. Sanborn, Norway
Lester Spiller, Norway
Harold B. Hastings, Bethel
Elwin J. Mann, Paris
The citizens of this community have reason to be proud of their accomplishment. They have subscribed $62,500 to establish a national bank and few communities have done this without the aid of some sort being brought to bear on the depositors of closed banks. No outsiders or promoters are subscribers, they are all citizens who are local and interested in the welfare of the community and willing to make personal sacrifices for the good of the community.

Uncle Zeke and Hulda Visit the Stores

Hens are laying better in spite of the rising market in eggs, so Hulda, the personification of thrift, boxed up a few dozen. "We sported on the proceeds and had a bang up good time during our stroll in Norway, Tuesday afternoon. Business seems to be picking up in town, because we stumbled against many of our rural neighbors buying for future needs. Probably the front page suggestion in last week's Advertiser, about the upward climb in prices certain to come was the reason for this activity.

At McAllister's the chocolate ice cream soda, the special this week, went to the right spot and it was good. We were informed that for the week end coffee ice cream sodas will be the popular thing along with other flavors carried every day. The luncheonette was in full action again this week and will continue as a favorite place to meet friends and make the store one's headquarters while in town.

Crossing Main Street to the L. F. Pike Co., I followed Hulda's advice to buy a suit while the present low price remains. In spite of some advances in the market, we found no mark-up in goods, but would advise the thrifty with a little capital to invest now. Hulda purchased a Jantzen swim suit, the kind with a beautiful lady in a swan dive, for a trademark. My additional purchases included a genuine Panama hat, for our trip to the beach and a sport cap to tote around when city relatives arrive.

The Children's Corner

A Butterfly Hunt

On sudden springlike days in midwinter, when the melting snow drips from each slanting roof, the hibernating butterflies, deceived by the unexpected warmth, show themselves to our astonished view.

Are they not killed by the frost? How can such tender creatures live through the bitter cold nights? We would surely think they would die of many varieties do, but a single frost of hard butterflies escapes for which the cold has no terror, and which hide through the winter to enjoy a new awakening in the spring.

They are the "Yellow Edge" or "Andromeda" butterfly, with red-brown velvet wings, and with old gold, the edges of which about the woodlands in early spring; then there are the "Common" and "Stem" butterflies, the "Red Admiral" and "Queen" butterflies, and the same sturdy group of "Orange" and "Black" butterflies. They are easily as they are, as their wings have a sharp, pointed, bat-like appearance. In the spring, long after the Cecropia and Prometheus moths have faded themselves away sunnily in their warm silken cocoons, you can see the last broods of the "Andromeda" butterflies, either in the form of chrysalids, or still feeding as butterflies upon various late plants, such as lupine and cornflower.

But when they turn into chrysalids and these develop rapidly. In two weeks at most they reappear as butterflies. The occasional frosty days do not harm them, but seem rather to hasten their change.

Flowers at this season are rare, but a few may still be found in sheltered spots and the newly escaped butterflies are not discouraged. The flowers are made of petals, and they fly to the flowers keep near the older ones. You may see them sucking the sweet juices of the crushed apples as sweetly as their earlier brothers and sisters do the rose and the lily. Even the rotting apples about the garden in the old orchard are not discarded, and many seek the woodpile and feed on the juices from the newly cut high logs. It is well to be independent and to know when to help one's self.

When, however, the biting chill of November nights ushers in the winter, and hoarfrost whitens the roadside and meadow, you will look for the "Angle Wings" in vain—that is, unless you look in the right place and search for it there.

Indeed, it is no easy task, for they have crept away under loose shingles and clapboards, or in cracks and crannies in barns, especially beneath the roofs, close to the hay, where they sit with wings folded upon their backs so as to hide their bright colors. The dull tints of the underside are so much like their dusky hiding places that it is most difficult to find them.

There they remain as if quite dead, but when the warm thaw of midwinter penetrates to their dark hiding places, they come crawling out to seek the bright sunshine. They expand their stiff wings and flutter about in the open as joyously and contentedly as in May—a pretty sight indeed!

Yes, you might have a butterfly hunt in winter, but you need very sharp wits and eyes.

Queer Questions

Have you ever heard the dogwood

Or a pussy willow purr?

Does a larkspur sing just like a lark?

Can one make coats of fir?

Did you ever hear a horse sorrel neigh?

Or see it run a race?

Can we really tell the time of day by four o'clock's red face?

If a cowslip down does it hurt to fall?

Is oxalis a lady ox?

Does the sleeping clover wake at all?

Are sheep or birds in phlox?

Is the toadflax woven into cloth?

Is silkworm made of silk?

Does a pale star-dewer attract a moth?

Can one drink milkweed's milk?

Is a tiger lily dangerous?

Can a dandelion roar?

Are the catkins any kin to us?

Please tell me, I implore.

I've a brand-new flower book, you see.

I've read the index through.

And these are questions bothering me.

I think them queer, don't you?

Churchill O'Donnell of Portland, while looking over some papers belonging to his father, James H. O'Donnell of Portland, found a ledger relating to West Bethel, taken in July, 1867, which reads as follows:

A delightful Summer Resort! A pleasant and convenient house for summer board, has been newly fitted up, expressly for the comfort of families, large and small, seeking the pleasure and health of a neat and quiet country home.

On the premises are the celebrated and well known Mineral Springs! A complete course of perfect efficiency of the waters can be shown by several Assistants and many prominent Physicians. It is a fine palatable and healthy water, powerfully tonic and diuretic in its effects. There is an excellent chance to bathe in the water. Very many have received much benefit from its use.

The house is situated at the foot of Annascoggin Mountain, in the beautiful valley of the Androscoggin river, West Bethel; surrounded by lofty mountains and the most romantic scenery, affording views and drives unequalled in New England. The streams abound in trout. There are many places of attraction, such as Rumford Falls, Screw Anger Falls, Bear Falls, the Jail, Moose Cave, Unhaglog Lake, White Mountain, Song Pond, &c., &c., which can be visited in a day's ride among the beautiful drives &c. Around the house are beautiful forests of many kinds, making it pleasant for strolls about the Country Home.

Parties desiring can leave the house daily, by private motor or railroad, for the Lakes, White Mountains, Alpine House, Gorham, N. H. Transient and Steady Boarders Solicited. Terms Moderate!

Carriages always attendance at West Bethel and Bethel Depot to convey passengers to the house. One mile from West Bethel, four and one-half miles from Bethel Depot. Those desiring neat and comfortable accommodations at the Country Home, John Kingsbury, Proprietor, West Bethel, July, 1867.

Is there not someone who can give us a history of this well known Country Home and Summer Resort? We would like to print more about it. Will someone send it in?
